THE MOANING ROCK. DY HU MAXWELL Just where Les Critas meets the sea Frem Gaylota Pass I rested in the morning hours On turf of ocean grass.

Then wild and high against the sky
The mountain summits hung
Above the roar along the shore
Where surf a-land was flung.

The mountain, cleft from top to base, Asunder yawned, and through The dark abyss Los Critas flowed To meet the ocean blue.

A path like which the Mantuan Bard Eung led from earth below Through shades of night and gloom and bligh To everlasting wee,

From groves along the bright Yntz Of late I came, and passed That morn through Gaviota wild, And reached the sea at last. As I had walked between the walls
Of rock on either side,
I heard a whisper over me—
It whispered once and died.

I l'aiened. Nothing more was beard.
The battlements of stone
On left and right as dark as night
Rose gloomily and lone.

A thousand feet apart they seemed To frown and almost meet Across the chasm. The river flowed And murmured at my feet.

streamer-breadth of peaceful sky As ever beut above the earth
Where southern summers sleep.

From up the Pass the sea breeze came With odors of the tide. And wandered on like airs of down, And died and lived and died. I heard again the voice. It seemed No whisper, but a mean From caverned helghts the river o'er Along the front of stone.

'Twee still again, forever hushed; I heard it nevermore. I passed adown the narrow way And reached the ocean shere.'

The morn was bright—the aummer And on the turf and flowers I lay me down to rest, and while Away the noontide hours. I looked through haze and occum mage Toward resims beyond the sight, And thought how far the evening star-must trail its tender light,

Before it shines on on other shores Or kisses softly there The occidental blooming world go mystical and fair.

Then toward the craggy heights I turnol
And marked how grand and lone
Those everlasting summiss loomed
On high their columned atone. And by me mingling in the sea Los critos e ased to flow: Its waters mild had met the wild And raging surf below.

This brought to memory again The Meaning Rock. I knew Its legend lore; a part is false, But part is doubly true.

The story runneth thus: There was,
A hundred years ago,
A band of handits harbored there
And plundered to and fro. Full many and many a deed of death nd many and many a cursed crime Was done for hate and gain. They ever dared and never spared. Nor mercy never knew; They dreampt of gold, for gold grew bold And pill-god for and slew, Until their band had filled the land With rumors and with fear; For no one knew in what dark hour They might be hovering near.

'Twas vain to seek them on the plain With force arranged for fight. For they would vanish like a flash And save themselves in flight. Twee death to follow in pursuit, For in their rocky glen

For in their rocky glen One hidden bandit by the path Could slaughter fifty men. But once when autums winds were raw And mists were hauging low Aloux each tooky precipico As bleak and white as snow,

They heard a dismal voice that seemed Above them mosning "Death"— It was the Mosning Rock. They stood Aghast with bated breath.

The voice of woe was sobbing low; Their guilt increased their dread. They said it was the souls returned From all their murdered dead.

Each swarthy face and brow and cheek Was changed to ghastly white— A breeze passed by—the mean again— They wheeled in hurried flight.

With rush and strife they fied for life Or death the legend says, Nor halted till they were beyond Jonata and Yuez. Norhal ed evan then, but crossed Aroyo Grande's source, And through Causda del Osos They shaped their flying course,

And passed the Huer-Huero lone, That tideless river bed, And through the Pass of Averbal In terror still they fied;

Till in the wastes beyond the hill, where barren deserts burn They hid themselves smoogst the dunes that drift along the Kern.

They fled as those who fly from fear And know not where they fly; Who is afraid to die.

And never after that again
Dared one of them to tread
The path through Gaviota Pass,
That haunted ground of dead.

And still, although a bundred years Have run their course since than, The meaning voice may yet be hear Along the gloomy glen.

It ceases not in dark of night,
In morning hours, and low
When evening twitight settles down
And shadows come and go. And those who pass that way jet fear and say that spirits cry and plead forevermore for aid To every passer-by.

That summer morn I took my way A down the dark ravine Along the river as it flowed The mighty walls between,

And overhead I heard the moan; I paused to make reply— The hollow rocks were murmuring in breezes wandering by.

I took my way and paused no more Till by the ocean side I rested where the grass and flowers Were waving in their pride.

And backward from the sea aress The mountain grand and high. Their base was in the ocean waves, Their summits in the sky.

Then all the stories of the past, In memory came again,
The legend of the Moaning Rock
in that abysmal glon.

DRESS IN REEPING.

o Excuse for Unsuitable or Unattractive cw Fork Pout,

There are many women in our city and out of it who are often obliged to lend a hand to and frequently to take the entire harge of the cutinary affairs of the household. Sickness comes, and often domes-tic service of the right kind is impossible the service of the fight kind is impossible to obtain, and there is no alternative for a time but personally to perform the dinative of the home. No woman who then "buckles on the armor" should ever let that armor consist of a gown in any degree "fine." Only those dresses which will bear the test of the laundry should be worn, and there are no better fabrics for the purpose than the neat dark-striped or checked cotton cheviots, as they are or checked cotton cheviots, as they are or checked cotton cheviots, as they are mand warm and "do up" equal to new. A plain trim-fitting waist and a moderately full skirt, with a deep hem and a few tucks above, is quite the best style for such a dress, with a little colored embroidered edging for the neck and sleeves; the main points in a practical working dress being to have it light, serviceable and clean. So much depends upon these so-called trifles of domestic life that too much care cannot well be taken to observe the little details of home order and nealness, for neglect of such care may mean the cultivation of deplorable tastes and habits on the part of younger members of the family. Appropriatenees is also a feature not to be over-looked. This o obtain, and there is no alternative for

They fell like rain, and a step upon hall or corridor was sure to be followed by a miniature explosion of beads, and this continued until there came quiet a protest from a nervous member of the house, which resulted in the removal of the beads, but not of the unsuitable dress, for was accompanied by a silely visident surface. which resulted in the removal of the beads, but not of the unsuitable dress, for its owner had a soul above cotton gowns. Slimple pretty dresses are within the reach of even those of the most moderate means. Jimmie was curled at my feet, when presently he got up, stepped carefully acrees the rug gs it he was on game, and came to a full stop at the opposite corner. There he stood, a model for an artist. After being called several times he returned to his old position, but did not seem satisfied. He repeated the manouve only to be called back again, and after he had done so twelve times I began to get interested. Going to the corner of the rug I turned it up and there found a dollar. He kept on pointing the dollar ill I counted eighty-four. Just then some friends came in and I told them Jimmie would point a silver dollar. They laughed at the idea, but I fold him to 'hie on.' He jumped up, sniffed about, but it was no good, he would not repeat the trick. I nad to tell the story of what he had done, and going to the corner to pick up the dollar in confirmation of my story, found it was a trade dollar, which, as you know, is only worth 84 cents. The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicines, no doubt has large-y benefitted the consumers, as well as re-
